Melissa leaves 'House,' has 'First Affair'

By Joan Crosby

Melissa Sue Anderson

Melissa Sue Anderson, formerly the blond, oldest daughter Mary on "Little House on the Prairie," has just turned 21, so it is perfectly all right that she has filmed a love scene for a TV movie, and that she is more than happy to talk about it.

The scene is in "First Affair," airing Oct. 25 on CBS. Miss Anderson plays a naive Midwesterner attending a posh Eastern college. She's hired by her English professor (Loretta Swit) as a baby sitter and soon love blooms between Miss Anderson and the professor's husband, played by Joel Higgins.

"People who watched 'Little House' may be shocked by the picture," says Miss Anderson. "The scene wasn't hard to do. The first assistant director asked me if I wanted the set cleared before they shot and I said it wasn't necessary."

"The cinematographer had it all worked out and every once in a while, as we rehearsed, he'd say 'Guys, it's not pretty. He'd tell Joel to put his hand on my elbow or something like that and he'd say 'Very romantic' and we'd be told 'But it looks pretty.'"

"Just before we shot the scene I looked at Joel and said 'Now who shall I think about, Paul Newman or Robert Redford?' and he cracked up. We had a great time shooting the picture."

"First Affair" was filmed entirely on location in Boston and was originally called "Freshman Year."

Since she stopped filming "Little House," Miss Anderson has made several TV movies and one feature film, "Happy Birthday to Me," co-starring Glenn Ford.

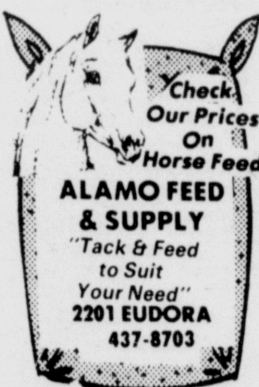

She has no idea what she will do next. Even though she's managed by the Svengali-like Jay Bernstein, she says, "I have the final decision on whether or not I do a show. It's only if I can't decide that I ask what he thinks I should do."

Does Miss Anderson get restless when she's not working?

"No," she answers decisively. "I'm not a workaholic."
